

RS#6 - Emmy & Nora

Start

EMMY

And how is that good?

How many women have left their husbands because of you?

How many women have left their children?

...

EMMY

I actually think it's good to be stuck in a marriage.

It's the fact that we're bound together, that it's difficult to leave, that actually makes people stick around and try –

I think -because if things keep on going the way you said they should, then –what will that look like –?

a future where everyone is leaving each other –

that in a lifetime one person will have tried to be with – what, four, five, six people – but always just skating through their lives, never able to settle or slow or experience anything that takes any real difficult time –

never finding a home,

never finding a place to rest,

a person to rest with,

never finding a person who knows you and that sounds –and what do I know –

but it sounds so sad

and so lonely, and so

so deeply unsatisfying

this future

where we're all just nomads...

Is that really what you want?

...

EMMY

You let me do this for you Nora Helmer will officially be dead.

You leave here,

you move somewhere quiet – you stay quiet for a couple of years – this trouble with the judge – it will eventually pass,

and then you'll be free –

free of Nora Helmer. That's what you always wanted, from the very beginning, isn't—?

when you walk out that door,

you want to find out who you really were.

You found that person. You don't need Nora Helmer anymore.

She's dead.

And now you really get to be reborn as this new person you've created. And me and Torval and my brothers can go on living lives without you.

(An unusually long period of silence.)
